Jenčík, Joe, 1930, Anita Berberova, Prague: Terpsichore. His father, Fernand-Georges Malraux, a stockbroker, and mother Berthe Lamy Malraux, separated when he was a child. A century of change, sustained or weakened by the impulsive tides of egalitarian struggle and the calculated risks of power brokers, had removed the legal restrictions crippling human intercourse between Jew and Christian for a millennium and a half, encouraging an unprecedented number of Jews to leave the caste-bound shelter of the small town for new lives in Frankfurt, Hamburg, and, particularly, Berlin, where the Jewish population was to double in only a decade.
