12.6 Building a National Identity

In 1995 the image of the RCMP and its predecessor the NWMP was sold to the Disney Corporation. Macdonald would have preferred to ignore the western frontier for a while, but he feared the Americans were eyeing the land for themselves. Then, in 1898, the first post-Confederation stamp without any relation to the Queen appeared, which was a map of the world in which Canada is prominent at its centre and the lands of the British Empire are highlighted in bright red.

12.6 Building a National Identity

All of these modes of expressing and shaping a national brand experienced a boom in the 1930s as Canada gained greater independence from Britain, although some of the key elements had already been established. On top of the throne are a stone lion and eagle.

Building A Nation

Current Topic: Building A Nation Weakened by drinking, disease and starvation, prairie natives enter a dark age.

The next generation of Canadian nation building

A chorus of Canadians were equally outraged at that development as well. The creation of the CBC shifted the symbolic language of national identity to radio waves; advances in photography and photographic publication in magazines and other documents were also important.
