Believe Your Own Press - StrangePegs: How To Be... a Human Cannonball

Interstellar Dreams

I dreamt of quasars that night
burnt a billion suns to not touch you
as I stood on the outermost reach waiting for stars to descend
and galaxies to crumble.

I dreamt of black holes that night
trapped all the light to not see you
as I walk behind the drunken path
longing to shatter the abyss
and suspend through singularity.

I stopped dreaming after that night
buried celestial bodies to not love you
as I configure the moon's orbit
hoping for planets to perish
and feelings to falter.

A shooting match, a thrilling ride For every age and size. This book did neither of those things.

Poem by Caroline Chavatel: 'OF THE RING: ZAZEL'

The Zacchinis, however, were clearly the prominent, first family of human cannonballing: The most famous family, the Zacchinis over 35 members devoted their entire life to this entertainment starting in 1922, coming to the US in 1929. The illustrations work well seen both from a bit of a distance, and from up close, with strong compositions and lots of fun details for kids to point out.

Wilson +1 mini from my favorite team Great... Your walls are a reflection of your personality.

What does human cannonball mean?

Have you seen the stirring woes of the frogs, stuck to the cement, thrown from the heavens by so many angry gods.
