In 1969, the democratically elected civilian government of that followed the NLC were left with a large number of media outlets under state control. Cricket, fashion shows are very popular with the media.

History &Media in Ghana

Kwame Nkrumah followed a socialist and neo-communist thinking that supported state-ownership to ensure that capitalist influences connected to private ownership would not creep into the media. However, there is a growing concern that the mass media are not fulfilling these functions properly. The media would want to get the message of democracy across to all people from all walks of life and therefore finds it necessary to communicate not only in the English language, but also in the vernacular.
