Thirty minute additions to the national bulletin were introduced in both Queensland and Adelaide in 2014. In the 18th century people of the Mande culture were highly represented among those enslaved in the French Louisiana colony in North America Hall 1992. Foord resigned as weeknight anchor on 5 December 2008 and was replaced by Melissa Downes on weeknights with and former ABC newsreader Andrew Lofthouse fronting weekend bulletins.

The provincial councils and moves to strengthen them were not popular. For example, the Sekondi-Tarkwa railroad, begun in 1898, was extended until it connected most of the important commercial centres of the south, and by 1937, there were 9,700 kilometres of roads. It was launched both in response to the similar bulletin Seven News at 7.

World War II had just ended, and many Gold Coast veterans who had served in British overseas expeditions returned to a country beset with shortages, inflation, unemployment, and black-market practices. By 1945, in the wake of a major colonial role in the Second World War, nationalists in the Gold Coast took a leadership role in demanding more autonomy. Only defence and foreign policy remained in the hands of the governor; the elected assembly was given control of virtually all internal affairs of the colony.
