LONDON'S RIVERSIDE: FROM Hampton Court In The West To Greenwich Palace In The Ea

The path passes the Wetlands Centre on the left passing under Hammersmith bridge into Barnes, then on to Kew, passing the famous Royal Botanical Gardens on the left, then the Old Deer Park into Richmond. Continuing east you pass the apartments of Thamesmead. Soon you head under Tower Bridge, past City Hall and into the centre of London, with it's many grand buildings, to finish at the London Eye on the South Bank.

LONDON'S RIVERSIDE: FROM Hampton Court In The West To Greenwich Palace In The Ea

This walk starts in the market town of Abingdon and after crossing the abbey stream, the river runs through open countryside for several miles, passing close to Radley, to the beautiful village of Sandford-on-Thames. Catalogue Persistent Identifier APA Citation Ebel, Suzanne.

London's riverside : from Hampton Court in the west to Greenwich Palace in the east / [by] Suzanne E...

The Thames was once a busy working river and heading west from here you'll see that parts of it still are, as the walk goes through an area of industry. From Richmond you pass through Petersham Meadow, past Marble Hill House and Ham House, through quite rural settings to Teddington Lock, which is the point at which the Thames is no longer tidal. The Thames Path National Trail

Passing through the town the Thames then runs parallel to the Great Western Railway on the approach to Tilehurst, the end of this walk. Although not officially a part of the Thames Path National Trail it is an obvious extension of the route. London's riverside : from Hampton Court in the west to Greenwich Palace in the east.

London 2: South

After several miles of open countryside the Thames comes into Bray and on into Maidenhead, with it's many large houses.
