Near the equatorial regions the epochs tend to last for about a decade, whereas over the tropical regions, away from the Equator, epochs last for about three decades. Strategies, which have successfully reduced the burden of AMR in the developed countries, should be evaluated in the developing country contexts instead of ad hoc implementation. Bukti-bukti urbanisasi Tadmur pada zaman Helenistik sangat sedikit jumlahnya.

This has important implications to autoimmune studies that plan to impute the classical HLA alleles to fine map the SNP association signals. Although more than a dozen NTDs affect the region, over the past five years four of them in particular - leprosy, lymphatic filariasis, visceral leishmaniasis kala-azar and yaws - have been targeted for elimination.

Drawing on both quantitative and qualitative data collected in Indonesia, the Philippines, Thailand and Vietnam, the study seeks to elucidate care arrangements for left-behind children and to understand the ways in which children respond to shifts in intimate family relations brought about by re configurations of their care. Increased monitoring, surveillance, pharmacovigilance as well as cross-border collaboration are required to address these problems. The principal driver of this loss in diversity is probably the biological and physical simplification of the habitat, but there is little direct evidence for this.
