Drug epidemics are clearly not just a peculiar feature of modern life; the opium trade in the nineteenth century tells us a great deal about Asian heroin traffic today. After a description of the smuggling of 'Malwa' opium grown in the princely states of Central India into China--in defiance of the monopoly of the East India Company over 'Bengal' or 'Patna' opium, grown in Bihar--it considers the role of Indian merchants and capitalists in its emergence and development, and critiques the argument put forward in a recent book by Amar Farooqi that it represented both a form of 'subversion' and that it contributed decisively to capital accumulation in Western India.
