Estimated battle losses for the patriots were 28 killed, 99 wounded and 12 missing. Wallace had the help of at least four assistants 8 as well as the company of other spectators.

The Pennsylvania Line Mutiny, its Origins and Patriotism

In 1792, President George Washington appointed Wayne as the commander of the United States Army of the Northwest, and appointed him to serve in the Northwest Territory, where he created a militia called The Legion which underwent merciless training and drills. During 1794, Wayne moved against the Indians. Confusion set in as the fighting began in thick morning fog inside the town.
