Newport Pagnell Town Defences (The Gatehouse Record)

They also discuss the functions of the more modest earthworks still evident in the landscape today: estate markers, town walls and monastic enclosures; and utilitarian built structures such as hedges, walls and fences round fields to separate animals from crops, deer fences and sheepfolds. Old churches were suffered to endure despite their often inadequate size or awkward location: expansion and renewal resulted in distinctive accumulations of structures of various dates at the greater Anglo-Saxon monasteries, until they were swept away by the Normans.
