Introduction to Module 1

We may, for example, communicate with our self about what we want to eat due to the internal stimulus of hunger, or we may react intrapersonally to an event we witness.

Introduction to Module 1

Whether in the United States, Japan, or another country, people are socialized from birth to communication in culturally specific ways that vary by context. Asking a friend if you can stay at their house because you got evicted or kicked out of your own place will help you meet your physical need for shelter. So what is the point of intrapersonal communication if no one else even sees it? Peter Wall is Chief Examiner and Principal Moderator for the SEG Media Studies syllabus and Chair of Examiners for AEB Media Studies A Level.

Introduction to Module 1

We often joke about phatic communion because we see that is pointless, at least on the surface. Although this seems like a perceptible and deliberate process, we alternate between the roles of sender and receiver very quickly and often without conscious thought. The emergence of elite classes and the rise of armies required records and bookkeeping, which furthered the spread of written symbols.

Introduction to Module 1

Answers to these historical, anthropological, and social-scientific questions provide part of the diversity of knowledge that makes up the field of communication studies. The interaction model views communication as an interaction in which a message is sent and then followed by a reaction feedback , which is then followed by another reaction, and so on. At a cultural level, communication scholars could study how the election of an African American president creates a narrative of postracial politics.
