The Baltics and Belarus: Development of foreign economic cooperation and improvement of the institutional structure

The 7000-strong 22nd Estonian Territorial Rifle Corps got heavily beaten in the battles around during the German invasion in summer 1941, as 2000 were killed or wounded in action, and 4500 surrendered. By contrast, Lithuanians succeeded in establishing their own political entity, which in 1386 joined in dynastic union with neighbouring Poland. In May 1940, the Soviets turned to the idea of direct military intervention, but still intended to rule through.

Lithuania is the largest of the three Baltic states; its armed forces total 7,800 professional troops.

The Baltic States: Why the United States Must Strengthen Security Cooperation

On a positive note, unlike during Zapad 2009, the Zapad 2013 exercise did not simulate a nuclear strike on Warsaw. For this reason, all relevant arrangements related to alert, political decision-making and command and control must be in place to ensure the rapid availability of allied air forces at any time. The loss of independence and incorporation into the USSR in 1940 had far-reaching demographic consequences for the Baltic countries.

A Turbulent Political History and the Legacy of State Socialism in the Baltic Countries

Some Latvians and Lithuanian conscripts collaborated actively in the killing of Jews, and the Nazis managed to provoke locally, especially in Lithuania. Russia started to withdraw its troops from the Baltics starting from Lithuania in August 1993.
