The Remaking of Modern Europe From the Outbreak of the French Revolution to the Treaty of Berlin, 1789

In order to insure respect for this neutrality a certain amount of military and naval precaution was taken, the expenses of which were borne jointly by the three states. The period between 1348 and 1420 witnessed the heaviest loss. These included, among others, the Decembrist Revolt of 1825 in Russia, the Greek liberation movement 1821—1832, an ensemble of events in Britain in the early 1830s, and the Risorgimento in Italy.

The French Revolution and the Birth of Modernity

III Revolutionary politics can also be explained in this same cultural and institutional framework, as an unprecedented and unrepeatable drama, a unique if ominous performance whose backdrop was the unstable reshaping of the nation's collective identity before 1789.
