Introductory Microeconomics

Please note that this is very different from the definition of Macroeconomics. Some questions are logical and some are philosophical. Simply put, the government should try to curb the extremes of economic fluctuation through informed fiscal policy.

Midterm Exam 1

A tariff is a tax imposed on important goods or services. Microeconomics seeks to make sense of the behaviour of individuals, households and firms. Microeconomics and macroeconomics are not separate subjects, but rather complementary perspectives on the overall subject of the economy.

4.9 Tariffs

In short, people make smart choices regarding how they spend their money.

Practice Exercises for Advanced Microeconomic Theory

Use the diagram below — which illustrates the domestic supply and demand curves for a good — to answer the following TWO questions. Why do you think that is so? Indifference Curves — Microeconomics Till now, we have covered a lot of principles of microeconomics in an intuitive way, through common sense and different examples.

Introductory Microeconomics

This course is assessed through two examinations; a mid-session examination 50% and a final examination 50%.

Midterm Exam 1

Veblen Goods They are similar to Giffen goods yet they are the different principles of microeconomics. LSE will not give or sell your details to any other third party organisation.
