The assets of MNCs It is often observed that the assets possessed by MNCs include many that are intangible, consisting primarily of intellectual property, including technology, brand names and copyrights, plus the human capital employee skills associated with these assets. The recent trend to more open investment policies has been particularly evident in the removal or relaxation of regulatory barriers to the entry of FDI. A wide range of funding options A wide range of funding options now exists, with various grants, venture capital and equity sharing deals increasingly commonplace.

Investment for Economic Development

But, as the GATT progressively developed through successive rounds of trade negotiations and, in particular, through its transformation into the WTO, investment-related issues have increasingly been addressed. Also, while most regional and plurilateral arrangements focus on questions relating to the admission and treatment of investment, the OECD Declaration on International Investment and Multinational Enterprises addresses certain subjects not typically dealt with in investment agreements, such as norms for corporate conduct and procedures for the resolution of jurisdictional conflicts. For example, there is evidence that a higher educational level of the labour force, a higher level of fixed investment, a higher level of local competition and fewer requirements affecting local affiliates of foreign firms increase affiliate imports of parent company technology.
