NEW YORK CITY American Lithographic Company, Inc. For slow jobs in a small shop, the keyboard-operated machine could be easily managed and afforded by one person; in print factories, the machines had round-the-clock crews of ten cycling input to lines of type, to the press, and back to the pot, like a bucket brigade. And American type designer Christian Schwartz 100 1977—partnered with Paul Barnes to form Commercial Type, a digital type foundry based in London and New York.
