The cover is promising, but all hope should end there.

A Woman Named Jackie

Truman Capote, Little Edie Beale Grey Gardens and others share stories that reveal the cold-hearted, mercenary black widow she was: a secretive woman who enjoyed bleeding everyone dry, who would turn on you on a whim, who would promise financial aid and not deliver it. Interestingly, her father and Jack Kennedy were both womanizers which must have been difficult. Jackie made about a half-a-dozen matches that night including one for herself -- a woman from university student services named Anita Hermsmeier.

A Woman Named Jackie

David Heymann seemed to think she was an awful person for needing to take sleeping pills for the rest her life and for having extreme mood swings. She was the first American woman to earn a gold medal in long jump as well as the first American woman to earn a gold medal in heptathlon.
