Where the gears can be engaged. Clout more an' more impittent every day, antill I seen there was no use in purtendin'; so one mornin' when we were both of usmyself and Mr.

The Cock and Anchor Vol.I

In the transition from the bustle of a town to the lonely quiet of the country at eventide, and especially at that season of the year when decay begins to sadden the beauties of nature, there is something at once soothing and unutterably melancholy. I regret the destruction of the man, although I neither saw nor knew much about him; and for your eminently providential escape, I trust I am fully as thankful as I ought to be; and now, granting all you have said to be perfectly accuratewhich I take it to bewhat conclusion do you wish me to draw from it? To judge from your face you are no less frank than hardy. Meanwhile, Lady Stukely's drawing-rooms were crowded by the gay, the fashionable, and the frivolous, of all ages.

Only think, Mary, what a sister you shall have, and the young lady laughed heartily, and then added, There are some excellent, worthy, abominable people, who seem made expressly to put one in a passionperpetual appeals to one's virtuous indignation. So saying she threw one arm round her cousin's neck and laid the other in her lap, looking curiously into her face the while.
