Any enemy contact reverberates throughout the BCT, causing further confusion.

The Certain Uncertainty: The Political Ecology of Environmental Security

These emotional and physical conditions closely replicate those of precombat, and if harnessed effectively, can be a positive impetus for aggressive action. The Public Historian publishes the results of scholarly research and case studies, and addresses the broad substantive and theoretical issues in public policy and policy analysis; federal, state, and local history; historic preservation; oral history; museum and historical administration; documentation and information services, corporate biography; and public history education. Killing is part of our DNA, just like love, empathy, family, etc....

For example, if the current year is 2008 and a journal has a 5 year moving wall, articles from the year 2002 are available. One of the largest, most distinguished, and innovative of the university presses today, its collection of print and online journals spans topics in the humanities and social sciences, with concentrations in sociology, musicology, history, religion, cultural and area studies, ornithology, law, and literature. The BCT often outruns the plan; the staff does not continue planning, and consequently fails to prepare to transition the BCT from one operation to another.

The hyperactivity of the preceding days rapidly turns into fatigue as the stress of initial contact combines with a lack of rest.

The Certain Uncertainty: The Political Ecology of Environmental Security

As a result, plans are frequently overly ambitious in their geographical objectives and rarely take the enemy, terrain, and time into full account. Finally, training that requires small units to establish security, report, and sustain themselves for long durations under combat conditions—repeatedly—best builds the muscle memory required to perform these tasks in combat or at NTC. To make matters worse, the BCT executive officer XO had just completed a scratchy and decidedly one-way telephone call with the division operations officer, who demanded that the BCT regain the offensive as soon as possible.
