Although primarily comprised of circulated newsletters, bulletins, and memoranda, the CISNU issuances provide insight into how Iranian students abroad were able to communicate, organize and, consequentially, create a united ideological front for defending the political and human rights of Iranian citizens. For example, the 1971 raid of police headquarters in Siyahkal a small town in the Gilan province of Iran by members of the People's Sacrifice Guerrillas of Iran marked a change in the narrative of the IPO movement, inspiring the more violent factions of each group away from peaceful resistance and toward armed struggle.
