These bookends divide into the frame story and the embedded story of an urban crime, the narrative shifting between the two story lines with few transitional markers. Unlike the above two movements, however, Saemaul Undong in South Korea was launched as a government initiative from the start whose roots lay in the rural campaign undertaken in Korea during the colonial era by Governor-General Ugaki in order to combat the growing popularity of the Left in the impoverished countryside. For the Park regime, such a Confucian revival had yet another benefit.
