Clegywomen Break Through Stained Glass Ceiling

Title: Breaking Through the Stained Glass Ceiling: Women Religious Leaders in Their Own Words By: Edited by Maureen E. Very minimal wear and tear. Women run the home and men run the church.

Women Pastors In Prominent Churches Reveal Cracks In Stained

Church leaders say more women are needed to shepherd the large churches, considering that women make up more than half of those enrolled in master of divinity programs in United Methodist seminaries. Nadell, Both groups of religious leaders were united in viewing their personal styles of ministry as different from their male peers, especially in their preaching styles.

STAINED

For some Christian denominations, including Catholicism, that proverbial ladder is nonexistent, thanks to centuries-old doctrine; for others, women pastors are beginning to get their due on the altar.

The Stained

Even churches that accepted women clergy did so reluctantly, without fully opening up opportunities. The Hartford Institute for Religion Research reports that women clergy are much more likely to serve in smaller congregations. Anderson is the first woman pastor to lead the Metropolitan A.
