Māori traditional textiles

FUNERAL Jews may not be cremated or embalmed. Practitioners often follow the techniques of their ancestors, but in the 21st century Māoritanga also includes contemporary arts such as film, television, and theatre. These dyes were used for hundreds of years but after European contact, early 19th century traders brought woollen goods which were often unravelled to obtain yarn.

Customs and Protocols on Death, Dying and Funerals

During his appointment at Yale as the Bishop Museum visiting professor Bishop and Yale are closely linked Te Rangi Hiroa toured many established museums in North America, Canada and Europe and it was there that his perspicacity shone. The stitches were removed and he forgot all about the incident. Permission of the Alexander Turnbull Library, National Library of New Zealand, Te Puna Mātauranga o Aotearoa, must be obtained before any re-use of this image.
