Where did you go when you left the farm? This song was written by Rodgers and Hammerstein. He knew ahead of time what they were going to say. This debate really should end here, based on a complete lack of evidence that Groucho ever said any such thing, coupled with his unequivocal statement affirming that he did not and Groucho had no motive to disclaim one of the most famous lines associated with his celebrity if he really had said it.

Ten, 20, or all the way to a 100? De Soto is the car that makes people stop and look. It was a voice of sandpaper and gravel and rusty scrap iron, rasping over a nation's loudspeakers for more than 30 years. Because this book was written across many years the tone does change, most notably in the end concerning Eden Hartford.
