The earlier records of these other dynasties do not mention this myth of origin. Ramangada then explains that Sindhuraja was not merely a human: he was an incarnation of Vishnu, and will end up taking Vajrankusha's head along with the lotus.

Navayana

Based on the king's appearance, the sage infers that he was a universal emperor , and welcomes him. Consequently, the Naga king had declared that he would marry Shashiprabha to the person who brought him the golden lotus that grew in the pool of the demon asura king Vajrankusha. The minister then introduces Sindhuraja alias Nava-Sahasanka as the king of , the city of.

The Nava-sahasanka-charita is Padmagupta's only extant work, although he wrote at least one other poem. The sage had told him that the curse will be over when he takes a message from Nava-Sahasanka to Shashiprabha. After waking up, he wanders around searching for the deer, but is unable to find the animal.
