Jones at the Sign of the Dolphin and signed by him. The inn-keeper proposed to the pilgrims that to make the journey more pleasant each member will provide an interesting story or tale and the one that provides the best story would be provided with a dinner and drinks at the end of their journey, at the inn-keeps expense.

The Canterbury Tales

Arcita rode away towards the town; And on the morrow, in the dawning light, Two suits of armour readied for the fight, Both sufficient and fitting to maintain The battle in the field between the twain. Near the end, I found myself skipping ahead to find out which story the Host judged the best never did say.

The General Prologue

One of 1500 copies finely printed by George W. I thought they were very interesting but I found them quite hard to get into. This world is but a thoroughfare of woe, And we are pilgrims passing to and fro.
