The Orphan; Or, The Unhappy Marriage. A Tragedy, in Five Acts by Thomas Otway

I heard her say so, as she lay abed, man. But Allah promises you forgiveness from Himself with bounty. The orphan saved by the power of games Quartz.

The Orphan

For my sake, Castalio, and the quiet of my age. You, to whom wit a common foe is grown, The thing ye scorn and publicly disown. No; to some city lodgings I'll retire; Seem very grave, and privacy desire; Till I am thought some heiress, rich in lands, Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling, Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing.

I found my weapon had the arras pierc'd, Just where that famous tale was interwoven, How the unhappy Theban slew his father. Desire first taught us words. I love a soldier; And had been one myself, but that my parents Would make me what you see me.

The story is founded on the Histoire de la conjuration des Espagnols contre la Venise en 1618, by the Abbé de Saint-Réal, but Otway modified the story considerably.

The Orphan, or, The Unhappy Marriage

If to desire you, more than misers wealth, Or dying men an hour of added life; If softest wishes, and a heart more true Than ever suffer'd yet for love disdain'd, Speak an ill nature; you accuse me justly. You'd say, I must not. When Castalio then attempts to enter the room using the same signal he is believed to be Polydore, and turned away.
