Honolulu Academy of Arts

Anyway, just a little local museum news for you all.

Honolulu Academy of Arts

A staffer said it had been growing too large, and they were afraid of the weight of the tree crushing the pedestal, or even smashing down through the floor into the basement. The kondō of Hōryū-ji: The two-storied kondō is another of the oldest wood buildings in existence. Or something to that effect.

The museum has grown steadily, both in acquisitions and in stature, becoming one of the finest museums in the United States. Additions to the original building have included a library 1956 , an education wing 1960 , a gift shop 1965 , a café 1969 , a contemporary gallery, administrative offices and 292-seat theater 1977 , and an art center for studio classes and expanded educational programming 1989. Guests may visit the Pavilion Café for lunch or the Academy Shop without paying the museum admission fee.

The Academy's permanent collection has grown to over 38,000 pieces with significant holdings in Asian art, American and European painting and decorative arts, 19th and 20th century art, an extensive collection of works on paper, Asian textiles, and traditional works from Africa, Oceania, and the Americas. Sure, I could go back to the Academy as often as I want in the next few months — entry is free, as I have bought a membership — and examine the real object in person.
