Taking care of older people in our communities

Effects of home care on caregivers' psychosocial status.

Family Caregiving Roles and Impacts

Although estimated that one in three Americans are currently part of a four-generation family, there have been few studies of great-grandparents and their intergenerational relationships. An intriguing body of research suggests that the parents of grandchildren being cared for by grandparents are the true beneficiaries of such care and are therefore most likely to reciprocate in this way see. First, interventions can support the caregiver as client, directly reducing caregiver distress and the overall impact on their health and well-being.

National Family Caregiver Support Program

The brief review here highlights the consequences of caregiving for leisure activities, quality of married life, and family conflict. Findings in the United States have shown that wives tended to give greater priority to assisting their own parents, whereas husbands provided assistance more equally between their own parents and their parents-in-law.

A Guide to Caring for Elderly Parents

This chapter summarizes patient safety and quality evidence from both of these perspectives. These findings suggest that psychological distress associated with the diagnosis may play a role in the risk of CHD and stroke.
