Lectures on rhetoric and belles lettres:
By Hugh Blair, ... In three volumes. ...
[pt.1]

This is NOT a retyped or an ocr'd reprint.
Hereafter, I shall have occasion to do the same, when treating of their writings under more general heads. Introductions of this kind, are a forced attempt in a writer, to spur up himself, and his reader, when he finds his imagination flagging in vigour.

Lectures on rhetoric and belles lettres
: Blair, Hugh, 1718

The Nouvelle Heloise of Rousseau is a production of a very singular kind; in many of the events which are related, improbable and unnatural; in some of the details tedious, and for some of the scenes which are described justly blameable; but withal, for the power of eloquence, for tenderness of sentiment, for ardour of passion, entitled to rank among the highest productions of Fictitious History.

Lectures on Rhetoric and Belles Lettres (Landmarks in Rhetoric and Public Address)

These Novels, both in France and England, during the age of Lewis XIV. Such are those paintings with which nature hath ornamented some of her works, and which art strives in vain to imitate; as the feathers of several kinds of birds, the leaves of flow ers, and the fine variation of colours exhibited by the sky at the rising and setting of the sun. He must not enter into faction, nor give scope to affection: but, contemplating past events and characters with a cool and dispassionate eye, must pre sent to his Readers a faithful copy of human nature.
