History of the Parish of Gortnahoe, Glengoole and Kilcooley

Glengoole's part-owner went into exile in France where he remained until the restoration in 1660 when he was re-granted his lands in Tipperary and Kilkenny; became the Duke of Ormonde in 1662 and was appointed to the highest political post in Ireland that of lord lieutenant. .

Trustees

It requires some degree of talent, and he does not come up to the mark. Since the Catholic parish is comprised of the older medieval parishes of Buolick, Kilcooley and Fennor these are used to organise material about the parish from the 1600s which forms the first part of this article. The name which is obviously Irish has been translated as the glen of the coal and there is coal in the high ground but the fertility of the glen is derived from the fact that it is on the limestone.

Gortnahoe

Burke's history of the landed gentry of Ireland published in 1912 asserts that it was John Hunt, born in 1582 to this couple, who became the founder of the Irish branch of the family and was referred to in 1650 as Colonel John Hunt. The female Volunteers were also tasked with carrying military instructions around the city during which trips they gathered intelligence on the strength and locations of the enemy and carried as much food and ammunition as they could safely deliver to their comrades.
