Abu Nuwas

Some of the stories centre on the hardship which strangers, anonymous or not, encountered in their journey or exile, usually shown in the epigrams written on monuments, rocks, or walls. Any mention of pederasty was omitted from his entry in the Saudi Global Arabic Encyclopedia.

Kitāb al

In 1976, a crater on the planet Mercury was named in honor of Abu Nuwas.

Abu Nuwas

As noted above, al-Isfahani's authorship of the Adab al-ghuraba' is disputed. In Bearman, Peri; Bianquis, Thierry; Bosworth, Clifford; van Donzel, Wolfhart; Heinrichs eds. Da Abu Nuwas so es folgende geschrieben hom.

Kitāb al

Given that al-Isfahani and his family very likely settled in Baghdad around the beginning of the tenth century, it is no surprise that he transmitted from a considerable number of the inhabitants of or visitors to that city, such as, to name just a few: Jaḥẓa d. Hence, he collects in the Adab al-ghuraba' the reports about the experiences of strangers — those away from their homes or their beloved ones.

Poems of Wine and Revelry: The Khamriyyat of Abu Nuwas. Although al-Ṭūsī's view is widely accepted, its veracity is not beyond doubt. After his death we searched his house, and could only find one book-cover containing a quire of paper, in which was a collection of rare expressions and grammatical observations.
