The Canterbury Tales Literature in the Middle Ages

Translations of many biblical passages are included in the , written about 1300. The most common symbol of the peasant woman was the distaff — a tool used for spinning flax and wool. However, the overall sense of his work is very much of a re-formed English, a complete, flexible and confident language, more than adequate to produce great literature.

Early Middle English Written Records

French language and culture replaced English in polite court society and had lasting effects on English culture. One explanation offered for the revival of alliterative verse is that in the mid-14th century the influence of Anglo-Norman was waning and poets were looking for a literary language to replace it.
