European labour law

Cooperation between countries to pursue social justice remains a pillar of the multilateral system. Reasonable differences are permitted if due to seniority or merit.

Equal pay for equal work

Under the article 19, this requires the worker habitually works in the place where the claim is brought, or is engaged there. This fits within the general framework in the EU. The deriving from the lists in article 2 1 the European Union's competence in the field of.

Equal pay for equal work

It is suggested that rather than adopting an internationally agreed upon group of labour standards, sovereign states are better off leaving labour market regulation to domestic policy. Workers should be informed of promotion processes and internal vacancies and should be able to participate in such processes and to apply for such vacancies.
