Consumer-facing business lines within the financial services sector, such as retail banking and insurance, have now also been added to the list of possible carve outs, for further consideration. Look closely at these architectural movements and you are likely to find ideas that date back to classical and ancient times. In particular, the Programme of Work noted that there is a considerable risk that uncoordinated unilateral tax measures will be introduced by jurisdictions where a global consensus is not reached, in turn leading to an adverse impact on investment and growth.
