Sir Thomas Browne, The Garden of Cyrus and the mystical number five

Look beyond Antoninus, and terminate not thy morals in Seneca or Epictetus.

Johnson's Life of Sir Thomas Browne. This is the dormitive I take to bedward; I need no other laudanum than this to make me sleep; after which I close mine eyes in security, content to take my leave of the sun, and sleep unto the resurrection.

Thomas Browne

His style is, indeed, a tissue of many languages; a mixture of heterogeneous words, brought together from distant regions, with terms originally appropriated to one art, and drawn by violence into the service of another. And therefore, rather than to swell the leaves of learning by fruitless repetitions, to sing the same song in all ages, nor adventure at essays beyond the attempt of others, many would be content that some would write like Helmont or Paracelsus; and be willing to endure the monstrosity of some opinions for divers singular notions requiring such aberrations.

Dorothy Hastings Born: ABT 1590, Cowdray, Sussex, England Father: Mother: Married: Anne GIFFORD dau. This surely is a lion not to be strangled but by Hercules himself, or the highest stress of our minds, and an atom of that power which subdueth all things unto itself. There is surely a nearer apprehension of anything that delights us in our dreams, than in our waked senses: without this I were unhappy; for my awaked judgment discontents me, ever whispering unto me that I am from my friend; but my friendly dreams in the night requite me, and make me think I am within his arms.

The Life of Sir Thomas Browne.

Self-estimation is a flatterer too readily entitling us unto knowledge and abilities, which others solicitously labour after, and doubtfully think they attain. Make such a one thy friend, in whom princes may be happy, and great counsels successful. A letter to a friend, upon occasion of the death of his intimate friend.

Sir Thomas Browne

To forgive our enemies is a charming way of revenge, and a short Caesarean conquest, overcoming without a blow; laying our enemies at our feet, under sorrow, shame, and repentance; leaving our foes our friends, and solicitously inclined to grateful retaliations.

Sir Thomas Browne quotes

Whether the one or the other selected those pieces which the author would have preferred, cannot now be known: but they have both the merit of giving to mankind what was too valuable to be suppressed; and what might, without their interposition, have, perhaps, perished among other innumerable labours of learned men, or have been burnt in a scarcity of fuel like the papers of Pereskus. Fitzwilliam Museum Married: Feb 1591, Wiltshire, England Children: 1. But the sufficiency of Christian immortality frustrates all earthly glory, and the quality of either state after death makes a folly of posthumous memory.
