Recognition of Foreign Divorce in Ireland

They lived together as husband and wife for about 17 years and had two children. The couple that first litigates where to litigate might be said to be cursed.

AFRICA LAW CENTRE: CONFLICT OF LAWS IN MARRIAGE

It remained a part of the law, perhaps perversely, because while it operated haphazardly, it had the effect of sometimes facilitating the spouses in obtaining recognition of a foreign divorce, if the husband could obtain a foreign domicile. Notwithstanding the absence of this particular jurisdiction in Irish courts, it was a principle of the system of private international law recognised by the Irish courts that they would recognise decrees of dissolution of marriage granted by the courts of another country where the parties were domiciled at the time.

Exceptions to the recognition of foreign divorces in Ireland There are a number of circumstances where a foreign divorce will not be recognised in Ireland including: 1.

Recognition of Foreign Divorces and Legal Separations

If indeed that were so, it would itself be a strong reason not to seek to anticipate the result, by way of a judicial declaration of public policy. Holley concerned a husband and wife who married in the UK in 1937 and emigrated to New South Wales in Australia. The second wife was domiciled in England but they intended to put up their matrimonial home in Egypt.
