Open Access, Open Systems: Pastoral Resource Management in the Chad Basin

The rangeland vegetation is an ecological resource that offers both provisioning and regulating ecosystem services to pastoralists; vegetation provides fodder for livestock, and it also plays an integral role in regulating the water-soil-plant feedbacks that maintain the productive capacity of the landscape Rietkerk et al. Pastoralists do not exist at basic. Pastoralists' dry season grazing reserves therefore provide a de facto buffer zone under local management which helps to conserve wildlife populations in western Loliondo.

Africa: Can Pastoralism Survive in the 21st Century?

Teenagers and young men often are the community's bachelor warriors. It is debatable if the development of smaller, privately held landholdings out of larger scale, communal pastures would lead to more commercial production of livestock in northern Tanzania. In the Serengeti ecosystem, state-protected areas cover a much greater proportion of the total ecosystem.
