NHS commissioning

At June 2019 there were 14 ICSs, but this will change, due to the NHS long-term plan announcement that ICSs will cover the whole country by April 2021 replacing STPs.

Five traps to avoid in a new round of NHS legislation

There are plans in place to report to practices changes to biometrics of affected patients, such as blood pressure, levels of blood sugar, weight, breathlessness and so on, recognising that changes are likely to take at least a year before they are seen.

The future of commissioning for social care

This is not about replacing paid roles, but about communities working together to improve lives with local people. A pilot of this approach to training in the genetics area proved very successful.

Who will shape the new NHS?

One reason is that the problems driving avoidable hospital use and disjointed care are rooted in , not just structures. The identity of our informants was kept confidential and findings are reported anonymously. This ageing workforce means that we need to attract younger staff and build their skills now so that we retain a high quality workforce for the future.

Who will shape the new NHS?

Members of SCIE co-production network suggest commissioners should ask themselves: Do you think your commissioning helps people in a positive way? Budgets for workforce education and training, public health and capital continue to have neither a plan nor long-term funding.

Can new regulator NHS Improvement save the health service?

We need varied channels to properly listen to people who use services, their families, communities, frontline workers, managers, and providers. In contrast with the US and some parts of Europe, PPPs are a relatively new phenomenon in the UK. Increasingly they are also involved in commissioning primary care and some specialised services see section on collaborative commissioning below.
