A master by the name of bKra shis rin chen also appears in the chapter devoted to the various lineages of the Kālacakra in Tibet; but, in the absence of historical indications or sufficient context, it is difficult to equate him with any certainty with the personage before us. Not the year of the male earth tiger sa pho stag, as an interpolated note in the modern Beijing edition of the mThong ba don klan falsely states, but the year of the fire tiger me stag. He is illustrious, indeed, for his travels in Nepal and India see the curious description of Bodhgāya in his biography and for his activity as a prolix and reputedly very rigorous translator of Sanskrit texts.

Is it possible that Dam pa bSod nams rgyal mtshan put these two masters, and perhaps others, in rivalry by inviting them to compose on the same subject? The Deb ther sngon po Blue Annals, p. It has the advantage of being particularly detailed for the period of interest to us here, on the one hand, and of having been the subject of a very correct English translation Roerich, 1949, 1953, 1976 which, above all, has an extremely well-done index. This is in fact the interpretation of Glag bla Chos 'grub op.
