Atlas of Human Anatomy / Edition 7 by Frank H. Netter MD

The constriction of the scapula medial to the borders of the glenoid cavity is called the neck collum and in this region the supraspinous and infraspinous fossae become continuous. The zygoma is removed, the Temporalis with the coronoid process of the mandible is reflected upwards, the neck of the mandible is removed, the outer ear is cut away and the mandibular canal is opened throughout its entire length.

The base of the petrous portion forms the medial wall of the tympanic cavity. Any difficulty that might arise for the beginner by an unusual method of presentation of the figures has, therefore, been carefully avoided. It has an irregular, rough surface, for articulation with the nasal bones and the frontal processes of the maxilla and, in addition, the frontal spine, directed downwards and serving for the fixation of the bones that form the skeleton of the nose.
