Underachievement in Gifted Children

The students had fun, and their retention was bolstered in the process.

Teaching underachieving gifted children metacognitive strategies

To distinguish whether a gifted student may also have ADHD, the school and home situation and settings must be closely monitored because gifted children typically will not display similar behaviors in all settings i. Students who underachieved in school did not demonstrate a strong belief in self, often came from families in which personal problems were evident, and were not resilient enough to overcome negative environmental factors such as gangs, drugs, and lack of access to resources.
