This collection forms the nucleus of the most famous among the mirrors for princes, the Sirr al-asrar, known in the Latin Middle Ages and early modern times as the Secretum secretorum. Zurayk, The Refinement of Character Beirut: American University of Beirut , 1968. The importance of dabīrī and the high standing of dabīrs secretaries in the Sāsānīān period and their continuing elevated status through the Islamic period has been studied by Christensen.

The difficulty in tracing the Arabic vocabularies which have non-Arabic roots or background is that when those adapted to Arabic, their morphology changes thus sometimes drastically thus to decipher their roots are challenging at least. He distinguishes three aspects of ádáb: 1 ethics turned either inward or outward; 2 vocational training limited to rulers and high officials; and 3 culture and education insofar as historical data, etiquette, good manners are concerned.
