Comparatively few of his plays, however, have been translated into foreign languages, or are known outside Italy. His plays, published in countless editions, still hold their place on the Italian stage. The Yale Dramatic Association is, therefore, performing a real service to literature and to dramatic art in producing one of his representative comedies before American audiences.

Indeed, his MÃ©moires, written in French when he was eighty years of age, read like the scenes of a play, and have been called his most amusing comedy. As the story goes, an aristocrat decides to purchase a fan from the shopkeeper Susanna with the intention of making it a gift for Candida. Her brother Moracchio holds the authority to select the man she shall marry.

He favors the innkeeper Coronato due to his stable income and secure lifestyle, rather than the poor shoemaker Crispino, who has won the true affection of the sharp-tongued damsel. It falls into the hands of several people.
