The Psychology of Genocide, Massacres, and Extreme Violence: Why Normal People Come to Commit Atrocities by Donald G. Dutton

Rather, is a carefully documented work that leads the reader on a journey into humanity's heart of darkness through a chapter-by-chapter account of the brutal litanies of genocide, holocausts, military massacres, lynchings, prison riots, rapes, serial killers, and wars of the 20th century.

The Psychology of Genocide, Massacres, and Extreme Violence: Why “Normal” People Come to Commit Atrocities

Dutton's volume, however, is neither fictional prose nor cinematic image; nor is it a study of a particular historical act. However, he notes remaining limitations in psychological explanations of extreme violence. I think Dutton has produced a book on this topic worthy of accolade, if not simply for highlighting the importance of these issues and for presenting a detailed outline of how such atrocities have presented across the medieval and modern world.
