Karl died in Zurich on 21st March 1919 of the Spanish flu. When Harold was nine his father. His parents were Anglican Church priest, liturgist and hymnologist, Percy Dearmer who became Canon at Westminster Abbey, and and his wife, Mabel Dearmer, nee Pritchard White, who was a writer and artist.

The Flute of Sardonyx

The old house doses away in the blaze In its solitude, silent and stern, And dreams of the glories of by-gone days And the race that will never return. And blood on the white broken body of each flower-like child. Over the years, Pierre had amassed an enormous collection of First World War poetry from many countries and he translated those poems into French.

27 November

But the sources, funding torment, God will find and fight It may survive the fright, we reap and sow So it can't hide for life But, in spite of this, I'm hopeful Sonic weapons fail Some jealous 'cause I'm closer I'm supposed to be what's destined Watch the names and not The faces, overthrowing things, that's precious Peaceful presences, subjected to what 'sposed to be For recreants, but accepted, even welcomed While Jehovah's people lessened, evil reckless Like a thing that's to be reckoned with Expecting it. His father was the Reverend Francis Bourdillon, an Anglican Church priest, and his mother was Sophie Bourdillon, nee Holland. When war broke out in 1914, both the Dearmer boys were studying at Christ Church College, Oxford University.
