Tithe Maps and Apportionments

The authorities used the information to create apportionment books which detailed the plots of land owned and occupied by all levels of society. District record maps do not exist for all the original tithe districts.

Papers are generally filed in a chronological order. Where there were a number of changes, at different dates, series of numbers may be differentiated by letters or some other sign, either in the original apportionment or in subsequent altered apportionments, as, for example, 22, 22a, 22Aa, A22.

A tithe map and apportionment were originally kept together and technically constitute a single document, but have been separated to facilitate use and storage, while in the custody of the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries, long before their transfer to the Public Record Office, and now form two record series. By discovering an ancestor in these records you can find the land that they may have farmed, or made their living from, as well as the houses, gardens and other buildings that they may have inhabited. Moreover, until about the early 1950s it was the practice, after an approved period, to destroy the maps of districts in which all annuities had been redeemed or otherwise extinguished.
