Piero della Francesca and the Invention of the Artist

While we know that as a young man, he briefly worked in Florence, assisting Domenico Veneziano with a mural, for the most part his career was centered in Sansepolcro, with a population of 6,000 a somewhat provincial place, although strategically located on the crossroads between important centers such as Florence, Siena and Urbino. The fact that his greatest paintings are in places a bit off the beaten path has surely slowed the growth of his reputation, and even his art seems to have a slightly provincial character, a quality at once quiet and remote, standing a little outside of what was happening in the big centers such as Florence. Piero invented the role of the modern artist by becoming a traveller, a courtier, a geometrician, a patron and much else, and his pursuits were taken up by countless authors and artists from Leonardo da Vinci to Giorgio Vasari.

Gilbert captures the spirit of the early Renaissance in this remarkable collection of primary texts by and about artists of the fifteenth century.

Informed with the intellectual rigour of Scholastic exegesis, it deserves to be placed with the classic readings of fifteenth and sixteenth century works by Erwin Panofsky and Edgar Wind. By a curious chance, Piero della Francesca died not only in the year that Columbus discovered America, 1492, but on the very day of his first landfall: October 12.
