^a“Comments” include editorial comments, introductions to special issues, comments on previously published work and responses to those comments.
^b“Non-empirical” include theory development work (without an explicit empirical component), methodological discussions and literature reviews.
^c“Qualitative Methods” include case studies, historical methods and narrative interview-based papers. The separation of case studies and historical methods is arbitrary; work focused on short-duration events were classified as case studies while longitudinal work was classified as historical.
^d“Quantitative Methods” include surveys, (semi) interview based work and statistical analysis of market data.
