Carlos P. Romulo

In April 1955 he led the Philippines' delegation to the at. For I, too, am of the West, and the vigorous peoples of the West have destroyed forever the peace and quiet that once were ours. Recall that President Roosevelt had decided to concentrate US power against Hitler, and that it was not until 1944 that the general public found out about Bataan, Corregidor, and the Death March, when the first

Realization on I am a Filipino of Carlos P. Romulo

As a soldier he was a brigadier general in the US Army, receiving the Purple Heart and the Silver Star for his service during World War II, and a major general in the Philippine Army. As with the trade bill, Romulo worked to ensure that the Philippine government was an active partner in developing the legislation. Kennedy, Freedom From Fear: The American People in Depression and War, 1929—1945 New York: Oxford University Press, 1999 : 527—531.

I Am a Filipino, by Carlos P. Romulo

Like other Filipinos before him, Romulo worried that, without time to expand its trade portfolio, the Philippines would struggle once the previous agreement ended and America began levying higher rates. I did not see them again until after the liberation of my country by the American forces under General MacArthur, aided by the Filipino guerillas who had carried on a vigorous resistance during the more than three years of enemy occupation.

To him belongs the distinction of being the first Asian and only Filipino who served as the president of the United Nations General Assembly.
